

Meredith Colby presents:

Increase Your Income as an Independent Voice Teacher

How to attract students, reduce turnover, and make the most of your time.

- Do you want more students in your studio?
- Do you wish your students were more respectful of your time?
- Do you feel as though teaching is taking a lot more time in your life than it does on your calendar?
- Do students quit after just a few lessons?
- Do you want to charge more, but feel guilty?
- Are you afraid to take time off from teaching?

If you answered “yes” to any of these questions, come join your fellow voice teachers for ninety-minutes with Meredith Colby, author of Money Notes: How to Sing High, Loud, Healthy, and Forever (WisInk Publishing).

Meredith has been a successful self-employed voice teacher for over twenty-five years. There’s no reason to learn from your own mistakes; mistakes that cost time and money! The smart choice is to learn from teachers who have already made those mistakes! This is your calling, but it's also your livelihood, and you deserve to get a great return on the time and care you invest in your students.

You'll feel supported as you learn new studio-management skills, and empowered as you put them into practice! It's easy to feel alone when you're an independent teacher, and the problems of running your own studio can get discouraging. Voice teachers are nice people; that's both our strength and our Achilles heel.

Come join other nice people like yourself to learn strategies for creating a prosperous voice teaching studio.

An engaging speaker and an expert in her field, Meredith leaves her audiences both informed and empowered.

This 45-minute talk can be expanded with some applied internet searching with audience members to a 75-minute event. Meredith Colby is available to speak in the greater Chicago area. Travel time of more than an hour will incur travel expenses. Responses to inquiry will include event specifications.
